Postmaster Caruthers.

Postmaster Caruthers sketched in a very interesting way the development of the post office business in this city, indicating how intimately he had been connected with practically every advance that has kept the Norwich postal department in the front rank.

His first entry into the postal service was July 1, 1870, when under Postmaster Bidwell he became stamp clerk, a position which also combined the duties of delivery clerk serving for from 800 to 900 call boxes. Those were, the days of three cent postage and there was a chief clerk with four clerks in the office here.

On Oct. 1, 1884, still under Postmaster Bidwell, the carrier service was instituted here, with one carrier and five auxiliary carriers are again Mr. Caruthers, who H. Cruickshank, John Porteous, John MacDougall, Sr., and the general com-mittee, Messrs, Mitchell, Sharp, Wil-son, McIntyre and Hollin. Rev. F. Johns Bohanan will say grace.

the service.

Under President Harrison Mr. Caruthers received his appointment as postmaster. How his forethought and interest for the working staff was exercised was shown by the fact that he was the first to put the Norwich carriers, under civil service. On the side of the public he also showed his willingness and ability to give them the lingness and ability to give them the best that the service afforded by securing the first Sunday night mall the city had enjoyed. This was not accomplished without effort that included trips to see the postmaster at Boston, the securing of letters and petitions, conferences with railroad officials at their headquarters, and much other de-tail, which finally resulted in the Cen-tral Vermont putting on a train for this service. With the aid of Congress. man Charles Russell another advance that benefitted not only Norwich, but all the industries along the line of the Norwich and Worcester road in New London and Windham counties was achieved when the double service be tween Norwich and Worcester an

Still another advance in which the Norwich office is notable in the state is in the rural free delivery routes of which the first from here, the postmaster said, was established in 1900 and there are nine now.

There are now 17 city carriers, 9 rural carriers, 1 carrier for parcel post and 13 clerks at the main office.

Assistant Postmaster Peale was toestmaster for the evening, a place he filled with marked ability as he introduced each speaker with a pleasant and witty allusion that put everybody in a good humor.

President McVeigh of the cierks' association was first called upon after the hanquet had been disposed of, responding in a pleasing way in which he made some complimentary references to Representative Thomas Reilly, to Mr. Bent's service as an alderman in New York and to Postmaster Caruthers as a man distinguished for executive ability among the postmasters of the state, He was followed by President Hinchey of the Carriers' association, who spoke of the value of fraternal gatherings such as the present, both speakers reusing much enthusiasm by their remarks.

THE DELAYED TRIUMPH OF THE GOSPEL. Rev. F. W. Coleman Answers a Question of the Times.

The pastor, Rev. F. W. Coleman, preached on The Delayed Triumph of the Gospel at the Trinity M. E. church Sunday morning. He took his text from Peter il, 3-4: "Where is the promise of his coming, for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation." He spoke in part as follows:

As travelers unexpectedly coming to

As travelers unexpectedly coming the summit of some mountain fall see the distant landscape beyond. see the distant landscape beyond, because of the clouds that obscure their vision, so the primitive Christians, though exalted by a new faith, failed to see into the future, or to understand the significance of their position. Their vision was limited, they did not see far into the purposes of God. They lived in the hope of seeing the coming of Christ in their own day and the consummation of all things while they were yet alive upon the earth.

Also we can castly understand how the enemies of the faith would improve their opportunity, asking with cynical

Welcomed to Norwich.

The man with a faculty for doing things was the way Toastmaster Peale introduced Mayor Murphy as the next speaker and he was given a rousing greeting as he told the men that he was glad to welcome to the city the employes of the greatest government on earth. Uncle Sam's men he said had the right of way in Norwich and he hoped it would not be long before they would be coming here again. their opportunity, asking with cynical sneers: "Where is the promise of his coming " What an absurd expectation! The apostles have all gone. The world still sings the same old sad song; moons still wake and wane; the tide moons still wake and wane; the tide action is better than all the stomach still ebbs and flows. All things remain as they were from the creation. The same question is asked today; it has been asked in every age of the world's history. The enemies of religion have ever asked, Where is thy God, O Israel? And many times, alas! the cry of the faithful has been heard; O Lord, how Long? Rousing Greeting for Mahan.

Three cheers with several tigers was the greeting given to Congressmanelect Mahan and the banquetters gave added emphasis to the demonstration by rising as he was introduced. Mr. Mahan passed out compliments to Mr. McGinley as the best postmaster New London had ever had and said he felt he was among friends since he himself had once been in this branch of the government service. He pledged himself to loyal and sincere service to the extent of his ability in Washington.

Now the Delayed Triumph.

It is not now the delayed coming which is the subject of criticism, but the delayed triumph of the gospel. Where is the promised success which has been so long the hope and mainstay of the Christian church? Where are the signs of any token of success even in this respect? Surely the final triumph of the gospel seems as far to bappenings in other days. He re-ferred to his connection with politics in New York, and stirred the banqueters to enthusiasm when he declared that he would stand for higher wages, shorter hours and some system of pensioning should he get elected for congress in two more years, of which he thought there was considerable probability. Currie Gilmour was the concluding speaker, responding with great acceptance to his hearers as he spoke of his twelve years' connection with the Greeneville postoffice and the substantial fraternal spirit which had been shown towards him by the Norwich boys.
